Sequoia Park Zoo Division
QUARTERS 4 CONSERVATION PROGRAM
2015

The mission of modern AZA accredited zoos focuses on education and conservation of wildlife. Zoos have an obligation to make a positive difference to protect and preserve the very wildlife that are featured in our collections and showcased in our educational exhibits. AZA zoos are expected to be leaders in wildlife conservation, and to contribute staff, in-kind services and/or funding to support conservation programs in the field (outside of a zoo). It is a stated goal of the AZA Field Conservation Committee that all accredited zoos work towards an annual contribution of 3% of each zoo's operating budget. Zoos of larger capacity often have dedicated staff working on conservation projects. Smaller zoos such as Sequoia Park Zoo that do not and will not have this capacity have found a unique and positive way to contribute to conservation, with a program called Quarters for Conservation.

This program began about ten years ago by Cheyenne Mountain Zoo, and has been adopted by dozens of zoos throughout the country, as a highly successful and popular way to help species in the wild and to engage our visitors to participate. Zoos report that this program has led to significant positive appreciation by their communities. As wildlife populations globally face an unprecedented extinction crisis, this program has a real public relations benefit.

The Q4C program works this way: each admission fee is "surcharged" $0.25 to be spent exclusively on projects that have a measurable impact upon wildlife or habitat conservation in the wild. The surcharge is built automatically into the admission fee so that with each visit customers contribute directly towards the conservation of wildlife and the zoo's mission. In exchange, each visitor receives a conservation token which they may place into one of three receptacles near the entrance and "vote" on the project that appeals to them most. In this way adults and children are empowered to make a difference for wildlife in a fun and engaging way. Conservation projects are selected by the Zoo's Conservation Advisory Committee. The Conservation Fund is managed by the Zoo Foundation.

Since initiating a preliminary and strictly voluntary Quarters 4 Conservation at the ticket booth in 2012, we have raised about $1,300 for the Conservation Fund. Additional funding comes from the Zoo Foundation membership program which contributes $1 from each membership sold, since the fund's inception in 2009. With these funds, we have awarded small grants toward the study and protection of red pandas, Chacoan peccaries, bush dogs, California condors, Pacific fishers, bald eagles, and others. Although the zoo has contributed between $4,000 - $5,000 annually to conservation, this falls well below the expected benchmark in the zoo community. With AZA re-accreditation occurring this year, initiating this formal program will facilitate maintaining accreditation.
